Right. It is state law. According to unemployment, that state law carries over to PUA.

How? If PUA is federal and is to cover those who do not qualify under state law? How can PUA follow state rules?

Unless the federal government made specific rules that usurp state laws, the state law stands.

situation is not in there. Would this seem like a reason to be approved.

Ah ok. So if your an SSDI recipient, you'll likely be denied for PUA as well.

I asked unemployment, and the rule around SSDI for regular unemployment also applys to PUA because the federal government did not specifically address SSDI recipients for PUA.
